Dexter Davis

3/24/26

Carver Alumni Association

Scholarship Essay

I have demonstrated leadership abilities in and out of school in plenty of ways, whether it is at my job, at home, or even outside of the classroom. As a guy who loves working out most of the time, I encourage others to have a better understanding of how a workout is supposed to be officially used in order for them to be better at that obstacle. In school, I have also been in a leadership role in my club called the “Black Student Alliance," which is for only African American students who socialize and get to know each other. One scenario would be to help out the members who need help for their work and how they can fix their time management as college students since there isn't any more high school in our lives, which is left in the past. I believe and know that I am a leader towards the freshman as a junior myself so we all can better each other for the future to be brighter than what it is. I myself as a person am encouraging the youth to never give up on whatever they want in life because time can come and go faster than lightning as we get older day by day and year by year. Outside of school, I also help the youth understand what to do at work by them learning how to do customer service and how to deal with people whenever there is a difficult situation that has been brought to their attention, which can be easily solved. I also encourage them to not be discouraged because no matter what they do, it is a part of life. From what I have learned as a twenty-one-year-old, what life brings you is what you have to apply it to for better opportunities that can be rewarded to you. In conclusion, when I think of the word "leadership," I think of it as bettering each other no matter what age it is. As life goes on, we live and learn from this leadership trait.